

Congress Wants to Talk to Your Client—Now What?

February 28, 2020

Robert Driscoll (Washington, DC) authored an article titled “Congress Wants to Talk to Your Client—Now What?” for the National Law Journal.

As we’ve seen recently with the impeachment proceedings against President Donald Trump, congressional investigations are very different than matters with which most lawyers are familiar. They are a blend of civil litigation, criminal inquiry, academic constitutional debate, public relations and politics. The litigation playbook most lawyers follow does not apply and actually can be counterproductive. Put aside the litigation playbook and keep in mind these tips.

Read the full article here.

Related people

Robert N. Driscoll