

Lawyering in the Time of Coronavirus: Novel Confidentiality Concerns

April 17, 2020

While confidentiality and the associated evidentiary protections (and the danger of waiver) should always be top-of-mind, during this unprecedented time of coronavirus and remote-working, lawyers—and clients—should be especially sensitive to maintaining these essential protections.

Christine Lipsey (Baton Rouge) addresses these concerns in a New York Law Journal Article “Lawyering in the Time of Coronavirus: Novel Confidentiality Concerns.”

Click here to read the full article.

Reprinted with permission from the 4/16/2020 edition of the “New York Law Journal” © 2020 ALM Media Properties, LLC. All rights reserved. Further duplication without permission is prohibited, contact (877) 257-3382 or reprints@alm.com.

Related people

Christine Lipsey