McGlinchey News Release

McGlinchey Stafford announced today that three new Associate attorneys have joined the Commercial Litigation section in the firm's two Florida offices. Ralph Confreda and Matthew Leider have joined the Fort Lauderdale office and Robin Rogers has joined the Jacksonville office. McGlinchey Stafford now has 27 lawyers based in Florida, and more than 180 nationwide.

The national law firm with offices in seven states has experienced steady growth in its two Florida offices since the firm first entered the Florida market in 2010. While the firm's initial expansion into Florida was driven by needs of clients in the financial services industry, McGlinchey Stafford now serves clients in the state across multiple industries.

"McGlinchey Stafford's approach to growth is based upon what our clients need, and we are confident that the addition of these attorneys will bolster the level of service we provide to our clients in Florida," said Anthony Rollo, national head of McGlinchey Stafford's Commercial Litigation practice group.

"We're very fortunate to be able to welcome these talented litigators to our firm," said Mark New, head of McGlinchey Stafford's Florida offices. "The experience and skills these new attorneys bring will help us successfully meet the expanding requirements of our clients, and strengthen our overall commercial litigation team in Florida."
