

Firm scores large victory for a worldwide energy provider client in Arceneaux v. Syngenta et. al.

September 24, 2012

A wrongful death suit involved negligence and intentional tort claims brought by the client's former employee who sustained a single workplace accident against multiple defendants, which allegedly caused the plaintiff to contract terminal lung cancer. The matter was actually referred and transferred by the client to McGlinchey from another firm after the Court originally denied our client's summary judgment. After years of litigation, the Court finally heard two partial summary judgments, one on negligence and one on intentional tort, and found in open court that summary judgment was proper on both issues.
