Clients rely on my depth of technical chemical engineering knowledge to efficiently understand their complex litigation needs and communicate effectively with industry experts and in-house counsel. For more than 30 years, I have worked to effectuate the best outcomes for clients' businesses by evaluating unique issues and guiding clients to the best resolution. I routinely handle products liability cases that involve collaborating with national counsel, appreciating the big-picture view of their businesses, risk exposure, and preferred outcomes.

Mark Bodin is an experienced trial lawyer who regularly advises corporate defendants and insurers on litigation matters, with a focus on products liability litigation in Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Alabama. Mark's chemical engineering degree enables him to provide special insight into personal injury and substantial property damage claims, addressing issues pertaining to the design, construction, and maintenance of chemical plants and refineries among many other manufacturing industries.
