It is not only McGlinchey's existing clients who depend on the firm's Appellate Team to handle appeals.

General counsel and litigation counsel in national companies, along with lawyers in other firms, retain our appellate attorneys after they have had other trial lawyers on a case. Among the many successes of the McGlinchey Appellate team are cases involving:

- Commercial transactions
- Constitutional law
- Education litigation
- Labor law
- Legal ethics
- Lending law
- Local governmental zoning
- Property and contractual conflicts
- Real estate and finance
- Taxation

The McGlinchey Appellate Team includes lawyers who have served on state and federal rules committees. Moreover, our lawyers have been recognized by their peers for their appellate skills by being selected as members of appellate organizations including the American Academy of Appellate Lawyers, and by serving as officers of appellate bars, including as President of the Bar Association of the Fifth Federal Circuit. In addition, a number of our appellate attorneys are former state and federal judicial law clerks, including those who have clerked in state supreme courts and in the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Contact your McGlinchey Appellate team for our latest insights about the following:

The climate for appeal proceedings. With oral argument diminishing in appellate cases, it is important for clients who are appellants to persuade the appellate court to grant oral argument. While oral argument may not always change the judges' minds, the back-and-forth colloquy often can reframe the case and how the ultimate opinion approaches the issues.

Appellate judges receive thousands of pages of briefs a month. We know that judges are inundated with paper, and we pride ourselves on making every court document – writs, briefs, motions – not only accurate but also eminently readable and persuasive. We follow closely all of the courts in which we bring appeals, and we work to phrase the issues in a manner that both captures the court's attention and demonstrates the merits of our client's position.
